Impressions By The Way.
The fortnight which the passenger spends on an ocean liner in making the Eastward and Westward trip across the Atlantic is well worth the time and the price, when the physical benefit, pleasure and seasickness are considered. The sea breeze is very invigorating and gives the passenger a wonderful appetite—if he or she doesn't happen to be seasick. On the Eastward trip of the S. S. New York the ocean was so smooth that scarcely twenty of the eight hundred passengers were seasick. The doctors say that a little seasickness is good for a fellow—or a woman-being kind of an internal Spring cleaning. A very little of it, however, is sufficient to satisfy the average person. On the Westward trip almost half of the passengers were sick on two different days, half the passengers leaving the dinner table one evening. When one promenades while the vessel is rolling he appears suddenly to be walking up-hill and instantly he feels the deck sink under him. It is the upward movement which makes one feel like giving up hope—and supper. Having the good fortune to escape seasickness in the trips over the Atlantic and the two trips over the English Channel, I had many opportunities to study the afflicted passengers at all stages of the game. Some of the girls fought bravely against it, one little woman in gray walking at least ten miles on deck to stave it off, only to give up gracefully at last. Seasickness is no joke, however, though there is considerable "gag" about it.

Before an ocean liner can land in New York she must report at quarantine in the lower bay, and must also transfer important mail to a government boat. Then the custom house officers board the vessel in the lower harbor, and every passenger must declare his or her nationality to an official. Then passengers are required to form lines and pass before custom officials and declare if they have anything dutiable in their baggage—if they have any clothing, diamonds, or presents. If one declares that he has thirty dollars worth of presents or souvenirs he must pay duty on that amount. These statements are made under oath, which the passenger signs. The officer retains your declaration and gives you a check to correspond with the number of it. When the boat finally makes fast to the pier the passengers are landed in the second story of the custom house and no person can leave until his baggage has been inspected. Passengers form in line and advance to the leading official who details an inspector to look through your baggage. Some times they turn things topsy turvy in your baggage, and again they will only ask what you have. My inspector, with my declaration in his hand, checked up my souvenirs until he had the amount declared and then invited me to walk up and pay my duty. The duty was half the cost of the trifles, and it was a beautiful illustration of the tariff. This experience consumes from one to two hours before you are free to leave the house. Four custom houses in England and France charged me not a cent duty and the loss of time was trifling. Many passengers make no declaration in New York and get through free but they take dangerous risks. In this case honesty is the best policy but it is rather expensive.

A HEAVY ENGAGEMENT.

The Allied Forces Attacked the Petal Forts on Thursday.

Emperor William Wishes to Reach an Agreement With the Allies Regarding the Guilty and Their Punishment.

Taku, Sept. 20.—The allies attacked Petal forts at daybreak. Heavy cannonade is going on.

Berlin, Sept. 20.—It is understood that the immediate cause for the issuing by Germany of the circular note to the powers regarding the Chinese settlement was the fact that Li Hung Chang, during his recent interview with Dr. Mumm Von Schwartzenstein, the German minister to China, mentioned a number of names of alleged high mandarins hitherto wholly unknown as those responsible for the Peking outrages, and said that China was willing to punish them. This explanation seems to be borne out by the following statement made by the German foreign office Wednesday to a correspondent in Berlin:

"What we want to avoid is an opportunity for allowing China to impose any sham concessions upon the powers by delivering up for punishment of persons who had nothing to do with the Peking atrocities. Hence it is advisable for the representatives of the powers in China to designate beforehand all who are notoriously guilty. Germany does not wish to pre-judge the case in any way. She wishes to reach an agreement with the powers regarding the guilty and their punishment."

"Russia, in my opinion, will not now withdraw her troops from Peking, inasmuch as Germany and the other powers remain. She will decide that circumstances have changed and that she must remain also."

The German papers, with scarcely an exception, approve the circular note. The Lokal Anzeiger says: "Mere notoriety does not suffice for the assumption of guilt. The ministers at Peking must produce proofs against each person charged."

Washington, Sept. 20.—With the German proposition to postpone peace negotiations with China until the persons responsible for the Peking outrages are punished, and the French and Russian notification of the purpose of those governments to begin such negotiations at once, awaiting him, the president found much matter of importance to dispose of upon his arrival in Washington from Canton Wednesday morning. He lost no time in notifying the officials he desired to consult on his return, and the day was largely given up to private discussion. Although it was stated that no answer would be ready to the German note Wednesday, it appeared that the president, after talking over the situation with Attorney General Griggs, Acting Secretary Hill and Assistant Secretary Ade, had arrived at a conclusion as to the nature of the response that should be made. Mr. Ade spent the afternoon consulting Acting Secretary Hill and in drafting the note of response, but all information as to its nature was refused at the state department. It was said that the note is to be gone over carefully at a further meeting between the president and such of his advisers as are in the city. The German government apparently is anxious for a speedy answer, as Baron Sternberg paid two visits to the state department after the German note was delivered. The Chinese minister was also twice at the state department Wednesday, seeking to influence the government not to agree to joint action suggested in the German note.

The conclusion reached in Wednesday's developments is that the powers are dividing as to China and at present Germany and Great Britain stands aligned against France and Russia, while both sides are ardently seeking the adherence of the United States government. The issue appears to be made up in such shape as to dismiss further hope of obtaining that harmony of action respecting China that the president has been seeking so far, and the point apparently has been reached where the United States must take sides or at once proceed to act entirely independent of other powers in reaching a settlement. The Chinese government is urging the latter course upon the state department, but thus far there has been a restraining force in the desire to avoid making the United States the first of the powers to break the solid front that has been maintained up to the present time.

Hong-Kong, Sept. 20.—An imperial edict received at Canton appoints Li Hung Chang, Prince Ching and Sheng to be peace negotiators.

WALDERSSE AT HONG-KONG.

Hong-Kong, Sept. 19.—The German steamer Sachsen, having on board Field Marshal Count Von Waldersse, commander-in-chief of the international forces in China, and his staff, has arrived here.

GERMAN-AMERICAN PARDONED.

Berlin, Sept. 19.—Emperor William has pardoned a German-American named Schuh in Kehl, who, after 20 years' absence, had visited his relatives and been sentenced to six months' imprisonment for contravening the army regulations.

BANK ROBBERS.

Three Men Relieved the First National at Winnemucca, Nev., of About $13,000.

Winnemucca, Nev., Sept. 20.—The First national bank was robbed of about $13,000 at noon Wednesday by three men who entered the front door of the building and with revolvers made all present throw up their hands. There were five people in the bank at the time, Cashier Nixon, Assistant Cashier McBride, Bookkeeper Hill, Stenographer Calhoun and a horse buyer named Johnson. The robbers threatened with instant death the first man who made a show of resistance. One robber, at the point of a pistol, made Cashier Nixon open the safe and take from it three sacks of gold coin. They threw this in an ore sack, together with all the gold coin in the office drawer.

The robbers then marched the five men out through a back door to an alley, where three horses were waiting. The men were kept covered with guns until the desperadoes mounted their horses and escaped. The whole affair occurred in but five minutes.

An alarm was quickly given and several shots were fired at the desperadoes as they sped through the town but without effect. The robbers returned the shots, but no one was hit. Officers and armed citizens have started in pursuit of the robbers, who took a course up the river. A posse has also started from Golconda to head them off and it is thought they can not escape.

FILIPINO AGGRESSION.

An Engagement Near Siniloan in Which 12 Americans Were Killed; 26 Missing.

Manila, Sept. 20.—During the last seven days there has been a distinct increase of insurgent aggression, particularly near Manila, along the railroad and in the provinces of Laguna, Morong, Bulacan, Nueva Ecija and Pampanga, culminating Monday in an engagement near Siniloan, at the east end of Laguna de Bay, in which detachments of the 15th and 37th United States infantry regiments 90 men all told, met a thousand insurgents, armed with rifles and entrenched.

The American loss was 12 killed, including Capt. David D. Mitchell and Second Lieut. George A. Cooper, both of the 15th infantry; 26 missing, who are probably dead.

The enemy had been pursued for several days.

There are rumors of attacks on the railroad and of trouble in Manila. Refugees are arriving here from Laguna, Morong and Pampanga provinces. The natives of Manila are restless and many are leaving the city. The hostile demonstrations are particularly marked along the railroad and on the shores of Laguna de Bay.

GEN. JOHN A. MCCLERNAND.

The Distinguished Soldier Passed Away Thursday Morning at the Age of 88 Years.

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 20.—Gen. John A. McClernand died at 1:40 a.m. Thursday.

He was born in 1812. He rendered distinguished services on the union side under Gen. John A. Logan and Gen. Grant, notably at Ft. Donelson, Shiloh and Vicksburg.

His death was the result of old age and a general breaking down of the system. About two weeks ago he was attacked with dysentery, and, while this was cured, he never rallied. He had been unconscious for the past 24 hours and had only been kept alive by hypodermic injections of strychnine and nitroglycerine. His wife, two daughters (Mrs. Fred Fox of Peoria, and Mrs. E. W. Williams of this city) and son (John F. McClernand, of this city) were with him in his last hours. His son, Col. Edward McClernand, military governor of Cebu province, Philippines, was as are in the city. The German government apparently is anxious for a speedy answer, as Baron Sternberg paid two visits to the state department after the German note was delivered. The Chinese minister was also twice at the state department Wednesday, seeking to influence the government not to agree to joint action suggested in the German note.

The conclusion reached in Wednesday's developments is that the powers are dividing as to China and at present Germany and Great Britain stands aligned against France and Russia, while both sides are ardently seeking the adherence of the United States government. The issue appears to be made up in such shape as to dismiss further hope of obtaining that harmony of action respecting China that the president has been seeking so far, and the point apparently has been reached where the United States must take sides or at once proceed to act entirely independent of other powers in reaching a settlement. The Chinese government is urging the latter course upon the state department, but thus far there has been a restraining force in the desire to avoid making the United States the first of the powers to break the solid front that has been maintained up to the present time.

Hong-Kong, Sept. 20.—An imperial edict received at Canton appoints Li Hung Chang, Prince Ching and Sheng to be peace negotiators.

TREASURY STEWARTS.

Vancouver, B. C., Sept. 20.—In an interview with Lieut. R. F. Hobson, published in a local paper, Hobson is quoted as saying that Adm. Dewey did not sink the Spanish ships at Manila, but that the Spanish opened the valves and scuttled the ships themselves. He said, according to the interview, that our shell fire did very little damage.

DR. HUNTER MC GUIRE EXPIRES.

Richmond, Va., Sept. 20.—Dr. Hunter McGuire, who was Stonewall Jackson's medical director, died at his country house near this city Wednesday, from the effects of a stroke of paralysis sustained six months ago.

SITUATION IMPROVED.

Gov. Sayers Reports on the Conditions in the Stricken City.

The System of Distribution to the People of Galveston Has Been Systematized.

Galveston, Tex., Sept. 18.—The ninth day after the storm, and still the grousers work goes on of recovering the dead from the gigantic mass of debris that lines the south side of what remains of the city. Sunday 107 bodies were recovered and cremated. Among them was a mother with a sucking babe tightly clasped to her breast. In this imperative necessity of the dispatch of the dead there are scenes witnessed that move the stoutest hearts.

The body of Maj. W. T. Levy, United States immigrant inspector of this district, was among the number. He made a gallant struggle to save his wife and three children. All were lost. The bodies of the wife and children have not been recovered and are still among the uninterred dead. The number recovered and cremated Monday has not been reported, but it will exceed 100.

The task of recovering the bodies that are beneath or jammed into this immense rick of debris, extending from the eastern to the western limits of the city, a distance of over three miles, is a herculean one, and the most expeditious way of removing the whole, from a sanitary point of view, is by fire. This, however, in the crippled condition of the fire department and water works, would endanger the remaining portion of the city. As it now stands, this immense mass of debris strewn with dead bodies, the carcasses of decaying animals, etc., is a serious menace to the health of the city and is the most difficult problem the board of health has to deal with.

The work of opening up the streets and disinfecting them is being vigorously prosecuted. The debris and garbage is being removed, 250 vehicles of every description carrying it out to a safe place, where it is burned, and in a few days all streets will be opened for the passage of vehicles.

The marine hospital corps, which is working in conjunction with the board of health, has established a hospital on the beach at the foot of Tremont street, where the sick and wounded now sheltered in the unsanitary places throughout the city will be taken for treatment, whether they wish to go or not.

Galveston, Tex., Sept. 19.—The work of clearing the streets of debris is progressing rapidly under the perfect organization instituted by military rule under Adj't Gen. Scurry. Over 2,000 men are engaged on the work. Ninety-eight bodies are reported as having been found in the wreckage and removed Tuesday, making a total of 1,861 victims so far recovered. This list is far short of the accurate number of dead found, because no official records are kept. Bodies found are buried or cremated, and no systematic record has been kept.

The storm wreaked almost every vault in the six cemeteries, and many of the dead were washed to sea in metal cases. So far only one casket has been found. It had been carried three miles from the vault.

Houston, Tex., Sept. 20.—Gov. Jos. D. Sayers Wednesday night wires the following statement:

"The situation to-night in all parts of the stricken districts, as far as known to me, are improved, and will, I believe, should we have fair weather, continue to improve. The method of distributing the benefactions of the people has become systematized and has been reduced to the lowest expenses possible and in this I have had the hearty assistance of the railway, express, telegraph and telephone companies, all of whom have promptly and without charge transmitted supplies and messages besides contributing to the relief of the sufferers. Galveston is being managed by its own principal authorities, supplemented by the assistance of a committee composed of its best citizens and also by the aid of Gen. Scurry. I am also informed that the United States marshal, Dr. Grant, has rendered and is rendering most valuable assistance."

ENDEAVOR TO PROTRACT THE WAR.

Spitzkop, Sept. 20.—Gen. Viljoen, who succeeded Louis Botha in the supreme command of the Transvaal forces, is reported to be moving northward in the direction of Heerstorp with 3,000 men and 30 guns. He is known as "The Firebrand," and will endeavor to protract the war.

CHARGED WITH HORSE STEALING.

Pana, Ill., Sept. 20.—Lewis French and Frank Mackey, the first named a former leading liveryman of Pana, were arrested Wednesday at Collinsville, charged with horse stealing. French had a large amount of gold and several thousand dollars of spurious money on his person.

BLINDED BY A BLOW.

Lead, S. D., Sept. 18.—While working in a mine north of this city, Capt. Grant Tod, of Lead, was accidentally struck in the back of the neck by a mining hammer. The blow shattered the nerves in such a way that total blindness has come to the man.

WILL INCREASE THEIR RATES.

London, Sept. 17.—At a conference held at Southampton Saturday the Trans-Atlantic lines agreed upon an immediate increase in third-class rates between the United States and Liverpool and Southampton.

HOWARD-MCGEE FEUD.

One Man Killed, Two Fatally and One Seriously Wounded in a Fight in Tennessee.

Madisonville, Tenn., Sept. 19.—The Howard-McGee feud had a dramatic and tragic climax Tuesday, in which one man was killed, two others fatally and one seriously wounded. Monroe county, the home of the Howards and McGees, had been expecting Tuesday's events for two years.

Tuesday at noon Charles Jones and his brother Joshua entered the Clew hotel dining room which was filled with guests and took seats at a table. A moment later Calvin and Tom Howard entered the room and met the Jones brothers face to face.

In an instant revolvers were drawn by the four men and about 30 shots were fired in quick succession, the terrified guests making their exit from the room by way of doors and windows. When the firing ceased Charles Jones was found dead on the floor with two bullet wounds in his heart and three in his head; Joshua Jones and Calvin Howard were mortally wounded and unconscious, and Tom Howard, the only one of the quartet left on his feet, had a number of bullet wounds in his body.

Two years ago Tom Howard married a member of the McGee family despite the strenuous opposition of the McGees. A few days later two brothers of Mrs. Tom Howard went to Tom's house and calling him to the door began firing upon him. Two of Tom's brothers, Ernest and Will Howard, and George Morrow joined in the fusillade and all three were shot and killed by the McGees. That was the beginning of the feud, since which time it has developed and grown with intense bitterness. The McGees were arrested for the killing of Ernest and Will Howard and Morrow and their sister, Mrs. Tom Howard, remaining true to her husband, testified against them. The trial was set for Tuesday.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

Portuguese Bark Fired at Sea.

Terrible Experience of the Crew, Who Escaped in Boats.

Santiago de Cuba, Sept. 19.—A sailor from the Portuguese bark Gertude, which left Galveston for Rio Janeiro, who landed from a small boat on the coast about 20 miles west of Playa del Este, declares that the recent hurricane washed the sea over the ship, and she was on the point of sinking, but the pumps were successfully worked, and she would have probably ridden out the bad had not the lightning struck her and set her on fire.

Capt. Esteban Olivera committed suicide and the crew abandoned the vessel, ten going in a large boat in charge of the quartermaster and two in a smaller one. The boats drifted apart. The sailor says his companion died on the high seas, but was buried at Playa del Este. Fears are entertained as to the safety of the large boat.

TERIBLE GALE AT HOME.

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 18.—The steamer Valencia arrived from Nome Monday afternoon with a large passenger list and $500,000 in gold consigned by the trading companies to two local banks. The Valencia brings news that a terrible gale raged at Nome from September 1 to 5, but that only three persons are known to have been lost.

ODD FELLOWS ELECT OFFICERS.

Richmond, Va., Sept. 19.—The sovereign grand lodge of Odd Fellows Tuesday elected officers as follows: Grand sire, A. C. Cable, of Ohio; deputy grand sire, John B. Goodwin, of Georgia; grand secretary, J. Frank Grant, of Baltimore; grand treasurer, M. Richard Muckle, of Pennsylvania. A resolution appropriating $1,500 to the Galveston sufferers was passed.

FATAL EXPLOSION AT TUNG CHOW.

London, Sept. 18.—The British commander at Taku cables that a fatigue party, engaged in destroying gunpowder at Tung Chow, has been blown up. Eleven Welsh fusiliers were wounded, two British, Indian soldiers were killed and 13 British Indian soldiers were wounded and Capt. Hill and 11 British Chinese infantry soldiers were wounded.

BODIES HORRIBLY MANGLED.

Chicago, Sept. 18.—Mrs. Mary E. Curran and Mrs. Anna Holmes were killed Monday at the 55th street crossing of the Chicago & Erie tracks. Neither heard the noise of the approaching train or the shouts of the guard, and were struck by the train going at full speed. The bodies were horribly mangled.

TWO SUSPECTS ARRESTED.

La Crosse, Wis., Sept. 19.—Two well-dressed young men were arrested at Tomah Tuesday, charged with the Wilton bank robbery of last Sunday night. They had slept in the woods all night. They refused to give their names. They answered perfectly the description given of the robbers.

FINES OF 50 PFENNIGS (12 CENTS) ARE COLLECTED BY TRAMWAY CONDUCTORS OF FRANKFORT, GERMANY, FOR ANY DIRT CARRIED INTO A CAR.

An old Chinese proverb says: "The error of one moment becomes the sorrow of a lifetime." That unfortunate country now knows how to appreciate the truth of the proverb.

FROST FLOWERS.

Frost flowers, composed of the ice which forms on frosty mornings in late fall and early winter, are found on only 26 species of plants. Among these are the frost weed and the heliotrope.

TAKE HEART.

Though fearful storms have swept in wrath
About thy toilsome, rugged path,
And thou hast oftentimes been cast down
And sore dismayed by Fortune's frown.
Faint not, but bravely bear thy part,
O fellow man; once more take heart.

The storm is followed by the calm.
And winter gales by days of balm.
Dark night gives place to sun-bright day;
Let hope still cheer thee on thy way,
Beyond the cloud still shines the sun;
Press on until thy work is done.

Perchance thou many times hast failed.
Some weakness over thee prevailed,
And thou hast faltered in the strife
And sadly rued thy blighted life;
Though great thy grief and keen thy pain
O weary one, take heart again!

Dwell not upon thy mournful past.
Arise, and for thy right stand fast;
Be strong and brave, fold not thy hands;
For thee still flows life's golden sands;
To better things sweet voices call
But God in love rules over all.

CHAPTER VI.—CONTINUED.

Reassuring as he meant his words to be, Marshall Dean himself looked anxiously about at the unprotected walls. Not even the customary "dug-out" or underground refuge seemed to have been prepared. Almost every homestead, big or little, of those days, had its tunnel from the cellar to a dugout near at hand, stocked with provisions and water and provided with loopholes commanding the neighborhood, and herein the besieged could take refuge and stand off the Indians until help should come from the nearest fort. "The name of Folsom is our safeguard," said Mrs. Hal, in her happy honeymoon days, but that was before the mother told her of the threats of Burning Star or the story of the Ogallala girl he vainly loved. "All that happened so long ago," she murmured, when at last the tale was told. But Hal should have known, if she did not, that even when it seems to sleep Indian vengeance is but gaining force and fury.

Presently Mrs. Hal came tripping forth again, a little carte de visite in her hand, a smile of no little significance on her lips. "Now, Mr. Dean, will you tell me what you think of that for a pappoose?"

And with wonderment in his eyes the young officer stood and held it and gazed.

There stood Pappoose, to be sure, what a change! The little maiden with the dark braids of hair hanging far below her waist had developed into a tall slender girl, with clear-cut oval face, crowned by a mass of dark tresses. Her heavy, low-arching brows spanned the thoughtful deep, dark-brown eyes that seemed to speak the soul within and the beautiful face was lighted up with a smile that showed just a peep of faultless white teeth, gleaming through the warm curves of her soft, sensitive lips. The form was exquisitely rounded, yet supple and erect.

"Hasn't Jessie written you of how Nell has grown and improved?" said Mrs. Hall with a woman's quick note of the admiration and surprise in Dean's regard.

"She must have," was the answer, "I'm sure she has, but perhaps I thought it schoolgirl rhapsody—perhaps I had too many other things to think of."

"Perhaps you'll find it superseding these too many other things, Mr. Soldier Boy," was Mrs. Hall's mental comment. "Now, sir, if you've gazed enough perhaps you'll tell me your plans," and she stretched forth a re-claiming hand.

But he hung on to the praise. "Let me keep it a minute," he pleaded. "It's the loveliest thing I've seen in months."

And, studying his absorbed face, she yielded, her eyebrows arching, a pretty smile of feminine triumph about her lips, and neither noticed the non-commissioned officer hurrying within the gate, nor that half the men in "C" troop at their bivouac along the stream were on their feet and gazing to northeast, that far down the valley horseman was speeding like the wind, that little puffs of smoke were rising from the crests of the grand landmark of the range, and floating into the blue of the heavens. Both started to their feet at the abrupt announcement.

"Lieutenant, there are smoke signals on Lar'mie Peak."

CHAPTER VII.

Lieut. Dean's orders required that he should march his troop without unnecessary delay to Fort Emory, there to take station relieving troop F, ordered to change to Frayne, which meant, in so many words, to take the field. Capt. Brooks, still wrestling with the fever, had retired to his quarters at the old frontier fort that stood so long on the bluffs overlooking the fords of the Platte. The surgeon said he must remain in bed at least a week, so meantime the troop packed up, sent its wagons ahead over the range, rode God speed to F as it passed through en route to the front, exchanged a volley of chaff and chewing tobacco over the parting game of "freeze out" fought to a finish on many an outspread saddle blanket, then jogged on toward Gate City, making wide detour at the suggestion of the field officer in command at Frayne, that they might scout the Laramie plains and see that all was well at Folsom's ranch. This detour was duly reported to the peppy veteran at Fort Emory, an old colonel whose command was by this time reduced from "headquarters, field, staff and band," six companies of infantry and four troops of cavalry to the band and two desperately over-worked companies of foot. "Two nights in bed" were all his men could hope for, and sometimes no more than one, so grievous was the guard duty. Hence "old Pecksniff," his adjutant and quartermaster and his two remaining companies saw fit to take it as most unkind in Lieut. Col. Ford to authorize that diversion of Dean's, and highly improper on Dean's part to attempt it. By this time, too, there was in circulation at Emory a story that this transfer of C to interior lines and away from probable contact with the Sioux was not so much that it had done far more than its share of that arduous work, completely using up its captain, as that, now the captain was used up, the authorities had their doubts as to the "nerve" of the lieutenant in temporary command. A fellow who didn't care to come to Emory and preferred rough duty up along the Platte must be lacking in some essential particular, thought the women folk, and at the very moment that Marshall Dean sat there at Hal Folsom's ranch, as brave and hardy and capable a young officer as ever forded the Platte, looking forward with pleasurable anticipations to those days to come at Emory, with Jessie—Jessie and, of course, Pappoose—so close at hand in town, there was gaining ground at the post an impression that the safety of the board of officers sent to choose the site of the new Big Horn post had been imperiled by Dean's weakening at a critical moment in presence of a band of probably hostile Sioux. Burleigh had plainly intimated as much to his chief clerk and Col. Stevens, and when Loring and Stone came through a day or two later and questions were asked about that meeting, the aid-de-camp gave it as distinctly to be understood that he had practically assumed command, Dean's inexperience being manifest, and his own prompt measures had extricated the little detachment from a most delicate and dangerous position. The engineer, let it be said, did not hear this statement, and the aid was very careful not to make it in his presence. He was a comparative stranger, and as no one presumed to question him he volunteered no information.

Planning to bivouac until dawn of the next day at Folsom's, Dean had then intended to reach Fort Emory in three easy marches. He was anxious to bring his horses in best possible condition, despite all their hard service; yet now, barely two o'clock on this hot June afternoon, came most unlooked-for, most unfortunate interruption to his plans. Springing to the gate at the sergeant's summons, he first directed his gaze to the distant peaks, recognizing instantly the nature of the smoke puffs there rising, then turned for explanation to the swift-riding courier, whose horse's heels were making the dust fly from the sun-dried soil. One or two ranch hands, with anxious faces, came hastening over from the corral. The dark cook rushed up from the kitchen, rifle in hand. Plainly those fellows were well used to war's alarms. Mrs. Folsom, with staring eyes and dreadful anxiety in her face, gazed only at the hurrying courier, clinging to the while to the pillar of the portico, as though needing support. The smoke puffs on the mountain, the dust-cloud back of the tearing rider were symptoms enough for Dean.

"Get in your herd, sergeant!" he shouted, at the top of his voice; and over the rushing of the Laramie his words reached the rousing bivouac, and saddle blankets were sent swinging in air in signal to the distant guards, and within a few seconds every horse was headed for home; and then, to the sound of excited voices was added the rousing thunder of scores of bounding hoofs, as, all in a dust-cloud of their own, the sixty chargers came galloping in, ears erect, eyes ablaze, nostrils wide, manes and tails streaming in the blaze, guided by their eager guards full tilt for camp. Out ran their riders, bridles in hand, to meet and check them, every horse when within a few yards of his master seeming to settle on his haunches and plow up the turf in the sudden effort to check his speed, long months of service on the plains and in the heart of Indian land having taught them in times of alarm or peril that the quicker they reached the guiding hand and bore, each, his soldier on his back, the quicker would vanish the common foe. Even before the panting steed of the headlong courier came within hailing distance of the ranch, half the horses in the troop were caught and the bits were rattling between their teeth; then, as the messenger tore along the gentle slope that led to the gateway, his wearied horse laboring painfully at the rise, Mrs. Folsom recognized one of her husband's herdsmen, a man who had lived long years in Wyoming and could be univured by no false alarm, and her voice went up in a shriek of fear as she read the tidings in his almost ghastly face.

"Where is Hal?" she screamed. "Oh, what has happened?"

"He's safe," was the answering call, as the rider waved a reassuring hand, but at the instant he bent low. "Thank God, you're here, lieutenant," he gasped. "Mount quick. Hal's corralled two miles out there under the butte—Sioux!" And then they saw that he was swooning, that the blood was streaming down the left thigh and leg, and before hand could help him he rolled senseless, doubled up in the dust at his horse's feet, and the weary creature never even started.

"Saddle up, men!" rang the order across the stream. And then while strong arms lifted and bore the wounded herdsmen to the porch, Dean turned to the wailing mistress, who, white-faced and terror-stricken, was wringing her hands and moaning and running wildly up and down the walk and calling for some one to go and save her husband. Dean almost bore her to a chair and bade her fear nothing. He and his men would lose not a moment. On the floor at her feet lay the little card photograph, and Dean, hardly thinking what he did, stooped, picked it up and placed it in the pocket of his hunting shirt, just as the trumpeter on his plunging gray reached the gate, Dean's big, handsome charger trotting swiftly alongside. In an instant the lieutenant was in saddle, in another second a trooper galloped up with his belt and carbine. Already the men were leading into line across the stream, and, bidding the trumpeter tell Sergt. Shaughnessy to follow at speed, the young officer struck spur to his horse and, carbine in hand, a single trooper at his heels, away he darted down the valley. C troop, splashing through the ford a moment later, took the direct road past the stockade of the corral, disappeared from sight a moment behind that wooden fortification, and, when next it hove in view, it was galloping front into line far down the Laramie, then once more vanished behind its curtain of dust.

"Two miles out there under the butte," was the only indication the young officer had of the scene of the fight, for fight he knew it must be, and even as he went bounding down the valley he recalled the story of the Indian girl, the threats of Burning Star, the vowed vengeance of her brothers. Could it be that, taking advantage of this raid of Red Cloud, far from all the reservations, far from possibility of detection by count of prying agents, the three had induced a gang of daring, devil-may-care young warriors to slip away from the Big Horn with them and, riding stealthily away from the beaten trails, to ford the Platte beyond the ken of watchful eyes at Fetterman and sneak through the mountain range to the beautiful, fertile valley beyond, and there lie in wait for Hal Folsom or for those he loved? What was to prevent? Well they knew the exact location of his ranch. They had fished and sported all about it in boy days—days when the soldiers and the Sioux were all good friends, days before the mistaken policy of a post commander had led to an attack upon a peaceful band, and that to the annihilation of the attacking party. From that fatal day of the Grattan massacre ten years before, there had been no real truce with the Sioux, and now was opportunity afforded for a long-plotted revenge. Dean wondered Folsom had not looked for it instead of sleeping in fancied security.

A mile nearer the butte and, glancing back, he could see his faithful men come bounding in his tracks. A mile ahead, rising abruptly from the general level, a little knoll or butte jutted out beyond the shoulders of the foothills and stood sentinel within three hundred yards of the stream. On the near—the westward-side, nothing could be seen of horse or man. Something told him he would find the combatants beyond—that dead or alive, Hal Folsom would be there awaiting him. A glance at the commanding heights and the ridge that connected it with the tumbling, wooded hills to the north, convinced him that at that moment some of the foe were lurking there, watching the westward valley, and by this time they knew full well of the coming of the cavalry to the rescue. By this time, more than likely, they were scurrying off to the mountains again, returning the way they came, with a start of at least two miles.

"With or without the coveted scalps?" he wondered. Thus far he had been riding straight for the butte. The road wound around and disappeared behind him, but there was no sense in following the road. "Pursue and punish," was the thing to be done. Surely not more than a dozen were in the band, else that courier could never have hoped to get in, wounded as he was. The Indians were too few in number to dare follow to the ranch, guarded as, by almost God-given luck, it happened to be through the unlooked-for presence of the troops. No, it was a small band, though a daring one. Its lookout had surely warned it by this time of his coming, and by this time, too, all save one or two who rode the fleetest ponies and lingered probably for a parting shot at the foremost of the chase, had scampered away behind the curtain of that ridge. Therefore, in long curve, never checking his magnificent stride, Dean guided his bounding bay to the left—the north-east—and headed for the lowest point of the divide.

And then it all occurred to him too that he was far in front of his men, too far to be of use to them and just far enough to be an easy prey for the lurking foe. Then, too, it occurred to him that he must not leave the ranch unprotected. Already he was within long rifle range of the height; already probably some beady eye was glancing through the sights, and the deadly tube was covering him as he came bounding on. Three hundred yards more and his life probably wouldn't be worth a dollar in confederate money, and wisely the young leader began to draw rein, and, turning in saddle, signaled to his single companion, laboring along one hundred yards behind, to hasten to join him. Presently the trooper came spurring up a swarthy young German, but though straining every nerve, the trooper was still a mile away.

"Ride back, Wegner, and tell the sergeant to take ten men around that side—the south side of the bluff," and he pointed with his hand; "the rest to come straight to me."

Oh, well was it for Dean that he checked his speed, and as the young dragoon went sputtering back, that he himself drew rein and waited for the coming of his men. Suddenly from far out along the ridge in front, from the very crest, there leaped a jet or two of fire and smoke. Two little spurts of dust and turf flew up from the prairie sod a dozen yards in front, a rifle bullet went singing off through the sunny air, Rabb, his handsome bay, pawed the ground and switched about, and up on the crest, riding boldly in full view, two lads, naked, painted warriors, war bonnets trailing over their ponies' crests, yelling shrill insults and derision, went tearing away northward, one of them pausing long enough to wave some ragged object in high and give out ringing, exultant whoop ere he disappeared from view.

"It's a scalp, lieutenant," shouted the foremost sergeant as he came up to join his chief. "They've got one, anyhow."

"Come on, then, and we'll get it back," was the only answer, as with nearly thirty troopers stringing out behind them, the two launched out in chase.

QUIETED THE INDIANS.

Bishop Whipple's Method of Subduing Refractory and Rebellious Braves.

Most interesting is Bishop Whipple's account of the manner in which he once prevented an Indian outbreak, says H. B. Merwin, in Atlantic. "Courteousness of speech," he says, "is a marked characteristic of the Indian. It is an act of great rudeness to interrupt another, and the last words of every speech are: 'I have done.' Knowledge of this fact once enabled me to settle a serious difficulty. The Indians at Leech Lake had heard—as was the fact—that the government had sold all their pine without their knowledge and consent." An uprising was imminent, and the Indians had already killed the government cattle. Bishop Whipple was requested by the president to go to Leech Lake and negotiate with the Indians. "It was in the dead of winter, the thermometer below zero, and the snow deep. It was a journey of 75 miles through the forest, and it took us three days to reach the lake. The Indians came to their council in paint and feathers, angry and turbulent." Flatmouth, their chief, made a violent speech, to which the bishop replied briefly, as follows: "I shall tell you the truth. It will not be pleasant to my red brother. When you killed those cattle, you struck the Great Father in the face. When you stole those goods, you committed a crime. I am not here to tell you what the Great Father will do. He has not told me. If he does what he ought to do, he will arrest those who have committed this crime, if it takes 10,000 men."

"As I expected," the bishop relates, "the chief was very angry, and, springing to his feet, began to talk violently. I folded my arms and sat down. When he paused, I said quietly: 'Flatmouth, are you talking, or am I talking? If you are talking, I will wait till you have finished; if I am talking, you may wait till I have finished.' The Indians all shouted: 'Ho! ho!' Their chief had committed a great breach of courtesy toward me, their friend."

"Overwhelmed with confusion, Flatmouth sat down, and I knew that the ground was mine. I then told them that when I heard of the pine sale I wrote to Washington and protested against it; that I went to the man who bought the pine, and told him that I should oppose the sale and carry the matter into the courts."

"As I expected," the bishop relates, "the chief was very angry, and, springing to his feet, began to talk violently. I folded my arms and sat down. When he paused, I said quietly: 'Flatmouth, are you talking, or am I talking? If you are talking, I will wait till you have finished; if I am talking, you may wait till I have finished.'

"Oh, any old thing," replied the young man. "Of course, I don't expect the junior partnership at the start, but I want to be sure of an early rise."

"Very well," replied the merchant. "I'll make you assistant janitor. You will rise at four o'clock every morning and sweep the floors." — Collier's Weekly.

The eighth annual Kentucky Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened Wednesday morning at Nicholasville. Two hundred official delegates are present. Bishop Eugene Hendrix, of Kansas City, Mo., who has recently returned from Brazil, presides. Immediately after convening communion services were held, after which the roll of elders was called and their characters examined.

The ministers will be examined by districts. In the afternoon Dr. Hammond, of Nashville, Tenn., secretary of the Methodist Educational Board, preached to a large audience. George W. Bain, the noted temperance lecturer of Lexington, spoke to a crowded house at night on "The Century Searchlight."

There are five classes consisting of twenty-one ministers, who are candidates for examination. Rev. F. S. Pollitt has been elected secretary of the conference. The people of the town and county are manifesting great interest in the proceedings.

Good Investment.

The Eastern Kentucky Freestone Company, organized in July last, by Rev. L. E. Mann, Rev. E. G. B. Mann, Fletcher Mann and Dr. M. Dills and Charles W. Wood, of Carlisle, says the Mercury, has proved a paying investment, they having sold and contracted for the delivery of over $20,000 worth of stone already. Their largest contract is for $15,000 worth of stone to go to Lynchburg, Va., and the profits on this contract alone will be sufficient to repay all money advanced by the promoters.

Their charter and all writings were prepared and the deal was consummated through the Mutual Trust Company of this city.

THE SCIENCE OF THE CRADLE.

Cradles coming back, you say?
"Bless me! when the cradle go?"
Ask of Sleety Head, who says,
Surely be supposed to know.
What is Science? that it thinks
It can have the upper hand
In the Realm of Forty Winks,
Forming part of Babyland?

Science says they may, indeed!
When was motherhood for aught
But to furnish every need
'E'en conceived in baby thought?
Pillow-soft of mother love,
With a dimpled form may lie;
Mother's tender face above,
Mother's arms for rock-a-bye.

What does Science know about
Baby ways to Land of Nod,
That it tries to place in doubt
Paths the baby feet have trod?
Paths adown the Cradle Road,
Worn by countless little feet;
Poppy-lined and overflowed,
Leading out of Drowsy Street.

Cradles! Men of spiced and brain,
Yours the tendermost broad may be Obliged to buy, but then
Steam and electricity.
Yours the sea and earth and sky;
Ooze and star and gas and stone;
When you get to cradles—why,
That is mother's sphere—alone.

The Coming of Guiseppe

EARLY on the third morning of Milton Wakes, William Eyre, of Scraperlowe, was awakened by his wife suddenly sitting up in bed and laughing with glee odd in a woman of 65, who had for 12 months labored under great trouble. He turned on his pillow, and saw her rubbing her eyes with the back of her hand. Her white nightcap had fallen loosely back to her shoulders; her hair, still black and heavy, was slightly disordered, a pink flush warmed her thin cheeks.

"Such a dream, lad!" she cried, in a voice whence all the sleepiness had not departed. "Darrand were i' flood, an' big ships, such as one sees i' pictures, were sailin' up, easy as maybe, to th' New Brig. An' I stood at th' wayer side an' watched, an' th' first soul I saw aboard were our lad, comin' home to you an' me."

William's own eyes glistened; it was good to see her roused from her long apathy. "It means luck," he said. "Th' Lord knows as yo' an' I want luck badly know, though th' money as we had to find for Tom Basker's surely be all paid. We'll pull through, I make no doubt, an'—happen—happen our lad's safe an' sound somewhere."

Then he rose and dressed himself, and went out to the shippen, for it was nigh milking-time. When he returned with his two pails brimming with snowy foam and odorous as wild flowers, he found, to his great surprise, that Mary was kneeling on the hearth, blowing a newly-lighted fire with an ancient pair of bellows.

"Well!" he said, somewhat crossly. "Why couldn't stop i' bed till I brought your tea upstairs? You know as th' doctor said you were to rest fro' morn to night."

She turned her face towards him; sweet laughter still curved her lips. "Hark at him!" she exclaimed. "I might be a naughty bairn."

Then she worked the bellows until the blaze leaped up the chimney and the kettle that swung from a great pot-hook began to sing stentorously. As soon as she had lit it to the hob she began to lay the breakfast table, for the first time since her health had given way. The oatcake toaster was hung upon the bars; from the oven came the crackling sound that accompanies the frying of bacon. William watched her like one bewitched; he had never dared to hope that she would take an active part in the work again. But as they shared that meal, she seemed as sprightly as in the days of her young wifedom.

When they had finished eating, she went to the window and looked down the hillside to Milton. The Nether End was full of caravans and stalls; already one might hear the crack-crack of the shooting galleries, where assembled such holiday-makers as wished to make the most of their time before, in another hour, they departed toward the carrier's old yellow omnibus.

"Why, William," said Mary, "I feel that young to-day. It all puts me i' mind o' when you were courtin' me."

"I'm just thinkin', lad, as this even when th' work's done I'd like you and me to go down to th' Wakes together."

The farmer slapped his knee. "Ay, that will we," he said. "I'd have profited it myself, but for fear o' yo' none bein' able to walk."

So they made up their minds, and William's heart grew glad within him to see how much of her old zest had returned. She laughingly forbade him to help with the household duties made pointed remarks concerning his bewildered face, and finally she kissed him from her presence while she put the place in order. And when evening had come and they went arm-in-arm to the nether end, which they just reached as the sun was concentrating his strength for a golden glory, the first and most notable sight they beheld was young Guiseppe with her wheezing hurdy-gurdy and cage of Java sparrows.

The girl was standing on the green, near the forecourt of the Bold Cloudesley, turning the handle of the antiquated music box. Such of the notes as came belonged to some fragment of a long-forgotten opera—only now and again could one hear anything—and that was in the interval when the galloping horses wended for the gathering of new riders. Guiseppe ground away bravely, but her face was troubled, for her little show had no attraction for the village folk, and not more than thrice the livelong day had her plump little hands revealed the secrets of anyone's future.

Mary was touched by her loneliness; she drew William toward the place where she waited.

"I'm sorry for you, poor wench," she said in a low voice. "Hoo seems to be doin' but little business wi' that certainte thing."

When they had reached the cage she cried out with pleasure as she saw the Java sparrows:

"Lord ha' mercy! Birds as green as grass!" Then she spelled slowly the legend attached to the wires. "Your fortune told for a penny! Dear heart, I must have it done! Dost remember, Will, lad, how you an' me an' th' owl woman towed as we should marry happy?"

"Ay," said William, "I do that. An' now one o' these little green birds shall tell you again."

He dropped a penny into Guiseppe's palm; at her signal one of the sparrows perched on the wires and pushed it between the bars. Mary donned her spectacles and unfolded it and read in silence. The message affected her strangely; she staggered a little and would have fallen had not William caught her in time. One hand pressed the paper against her bosom.

"It says good news comin' fro' across the seas," she whispered, faintly. "An' now I know for sure as th' lad is safe."

Then she fumbled in her skirt-pocket and took out a little moleskin pouch, so worn that the hair only showed in patches. She untied the string and shook out the contents—a sixpence, a threepenny piece, and some half-pence—into Guiseppe's hand.

"It's all I've gotten, wench," she said, "but you're kindly welcome to it." Guiseppe's big black eyes had filled with tears; one or two trickled slowly down the smooth olive cheeks.

"I thank you, ma'am," she said, in a broken English hard for these old folk to understand. "It will find me room and food for night."

Some young men from the neighboring village of Greenlow-in-the-Water strolled up to the cage, and William and Mary moved away.

"Poor soul!" sighed the wife. "She canna be more than 15, an' she looks nearly starved. It's cruel work—a pretty lass like that—a black un, maybe, but as comely as ever I did see—"

"Come, loove," said William. "Thou'rt always findin' pity for something, even though it be a lame duckling. Where beest thou, for nowth' Bowd Cloudesley or th' Bull's Yead?"

"I be for home," she replied, "I dunna feel as if I could talk to anybody to-night. My heart's so full o' what's comin'. Go you to where you please. I'll be safe now gettin' back."

So they crossed the green and returned without seeing Guiseppe again, choosing a different way through the Hollow Wood and along the Moor Edge. For the rest of the evening they sat and talked of their lad's childhood—of his pranks and his rogueries. They made surmises concerning the changes in his appearance since he went to sea five years ago; they pictured him with a long beard of ruddy hue, like the moustache that had sprouted on his upper lip. When they retired backward they did not toss uneasily as they had done since the post had ceased to bring his letters, but fell asleep at once and did not waken till sunrise.

Mary was astir first; the new strength made her resolved upon taking up all her old duties. Before William had come downstairs she had "reduped" the house-place. As she heard his stocking foot on the landing she took a basket of corn and opened the door, so that she might feed the poultry. A sharp cry, however, brought William to her side in a moment. He found her on the threshold, gazing bewildered at the sleeping figure of Guiseppe, who reclined in a corner of the porch. A broken hurdy-gurdy and a cage crushed outside, and in a hollow of her gaudily-of-all shape lay on the flags at her side, and in the hollow of her gaudily-aproned lap lay two poor stiff Java sparrows.

"It's th' foreign wench," said William. "Mercy on us, how came she here, wi' her music box all smashed, an' her little birds are dead as stones!"

Mary lifted the girl's head dress, which had fallen forward. The dark face was all stained with tears. The old woman's touch, gentle as it was, wakened a plaintive little moan. Guiseppe's eyes opened, and she began to sob so bitterly that William stole away on tiptoe.

"You'd best manage her yourself, Mary, love," he said. "I cannot bear to hear it."

Then he hurried away, with his hands pressed to his ears, whilst Mary knelt beside Guiseppe, and, putting her arm around her waist, she drew her gently to the house.

"What is it, my pretty?" she said, soothingly. "How came you here, an' what's happened to your birds?"

Guiseppe's tumultuous weeping ceased soon, and she told the old woman a piteous story of how some drunken men from Greenlow-in-the-Water had taken her hurdy-gurdy and kicked it over the green, and when she had striven to recover it they had fallen upon the cage and beaten it with their sticks until the wires were crushed together and the little fortune tellers died of fright. Mary's hands clenched as she listened; she was a plucky soul, and had any of the miscreants come her way they would not have passed unmolested. But she knew that angry outcries were not to be compared with the curious pang that comes to a traveled man when he sees the most wonderful woman he has ever met.

The long and the short of it was that they fell in love at first sight, and that to-day, with their robust bantlings, they are the happiest couple in Peakland. They do not live at Scraperlowe, but William bought the next farm for a wedding present and gave him his own land to work, so that the old folk have naught to do save to delight themselves with looking on.—Black and White.

seppa up the stairs and made her down on the bed in the little chamber on the landing, while she hurriedly prepared a cup of tea. The girl drank thirstily, but ate nothing, and when Mary bade her rest quietly she sank back among the pillows and closed her eyes.

William heard the story from his wife at breakfast. "Poor wench," he said, "it were cruel hard to take away her means o' livin'." Did she say as how she found her way up hither?"

"Ay," said Mary, "she had watched th' way we went—ours were th' first kind words she'd heard for many a day, an' she were a bit touched like. You see, lad, her mother died a month ago, an' her father she can scarce recollect, for he only lived till she were a year old. She's had to support herself wi', fortune tellin', an' as there were naught doin' i' town, she thought she might make summat i' th' country. Half-starved she has been; Lord! there's scarce a scrap o' flesh on her bones!"

"Well," said William, "I reckon she must stop here till her strength comes back, anyhow."

"I knew you'd say that, Will," responded the old woman, "for you're ne'er one to shirk doin' a kind deed. Ay, we'll look after her; you see, th' little birds as good as said fine news were comin', an' it'd be ungrateful none to reward her."

Later in the day Guiseppe's talk became so wild and unintelligible that William was despatched to the village for Dr. Hattersley. When he came and found that the girl was in high fever he suggested that the workhouse ambulance should be fetched. Mary heard him with some impatience and flatly refused to take his advice.

"Th' poor thing's goin' to bide here till she's better," she said. "I've always been reckoned a decent nurse, an' I can look after her as well as any young madam wi' a white cap."

"Eh!" said the doctor, with a grimace. "I suppose you'll have your own way. But you must know that it will be a great responsibility. You're far from strong yourself."

"O, I'm right now at last, doctor," replied Mary. "You see, it's come to me as our lad's alive after all and so I've gotten summat to look forward to. It'd be unlucky, besides being wrong, to turn away Guiseppe, when she made her way here, Lord knows how, because she thought we'd help her."

The kindly doctor had nothing more to urge, and to Guiseppe became an inmate of Scraperlowe. She was seriously ill for several weeks, but her constitution was good (she came of fine Tuscan peasant stock), and before the time of the first snowstorm she was able to be moved downstairs and to sit in a big armchair by the fire. As she grew stronger she began to speak of her departure, but Mary always silenced her tenderly.

"It's for you to choose, wench," she said at last. "My master an' I'd be main sorry, if you left us, for we've come to care for you more than a little. Why none stay wi' us for good?—there's many an' many a thing as you can help wi'. You see, Guiseppe, I be gettin' owd."

The girl thanked her with luminous eyes and from that day began to work in the place as if it were her own home, taking such an active interest that the old folk could scarce express their admiration. The healthy life developed her southern beauty until she was regarded as the loveliest woman of the countryside. The respect and devotion which she showed toward her protectors was really touching, and as the months passed they began to look upon her as their own flesh and blood. She had the daintiest imaginable hand for butter making, and the poultry under her care was reared with admirable success.

Mary's idea of her having brought luck was confirmed in the following spring, when William received a letter from a London lawyer, declaring him heir to the property of an almost forgotten kinsman. The fortune was large enough to keep them for the rest of their lives without working; but neither cared to give up the life on the old farm, and they resolved to leave it untouched till Will came back. Their faith in his existence was rewarded at mowing time by a letter addressed in the lad's own bold handwriting. In it they found that he had been cast ashore on the South American coast, and that he had lain some months in hospital. He had written as soon as he was able, but he feared that his letters had miscarried. His left arm, shattered in the shipwreck, had been amputated, and even if he had desired it he was no longer fit for a seafaring life. In short, he was longing to see his old father and mother again and to work on the little farm with all his might.

After that, not a day passed without their expecting his arrival. It was not, however, until the harvest that he appeared at Scraperlowe. On the third night of the Wakes, just a year since Mary had dreamed of his return, as they sat together at supper, she heard his hand upon the latch. She rose and ran tremblingly to throw her arms around his neck, and clung to him so fervently that William was obliged at last to beg for a sight of his son. And Guiseppe, when her eyes fell on the young man, felt her heart begin to beat very wildly; whilst Will, after embracing his father, thrilled with the curious pang that comes to a traveled man when he sees the most wonderful woman he has ever met.

The long and the short of it was that they fell in love at first sight, and that to-day, with their robust bantlings, they are the happiest couple in Peakland. They do not live at Scraperlowe, but William bought the next farm for a wedding present and gave him his own land to work, so that the old folk have naught to do save to delight themselves with looking on.—Black and White.

This is the grandest remedy ever made."

Mother's Friend

will do for every woman what it did for the Minnesota mother who writes the above letter. Not to use it during pregnancy is a mistake to be paid for in pain and suffering. Mother's Friend equips the patient with a strong body and clear intellect, which in turn are imparted to the child. It relaxes the muscles and allows them to expand. It relieves morning sickness and nervousness. It puts all the organs concerned in perfect condition for the final hour, so that the actual labor is short and practically painless. Danger of rising or hard breasts is altogether avoided, and recovery is merely a matter of a few days.

Druggists sell Mother's Friend for $1 a bottle. The Bradfield Regulator Co., Atlanta, Ga., send for our free illustrated book.

The Place of the Duel.
Mrs. Minnie Walter Myers, in her "Romance and Realism of the Southern Gulf Coast," gives an account of one of the last challenges to a duel which occurred in Louisiana. The affair was between M. Marigny, who belonged to one of the oldest families of Louisiana, and a Mr. Humble, a sturdy ex-blacksmith of Georgia, who had become a man of political consequence.

M. Marigny took offense at some remarks of the Georgian and sent him a challenge. The big ex-blacksmith was nonplussed.

"I know nothing about this dueling business," he said. "I will not fight him."

"You must," said his friend. "No gentleman can refuse."

"I am not a gentleman," replied the honest son of Georgia. "I am only a blacksmith."

"But you will be ruined if you do not fight," urged his friends. "You will have the choice of weapons, and you can choose so as to give yourself an equal chance with your adversary."

The giant asked time in which to consider the question and ended by accepting. He sent the following reply to M. Marigny:

"I accept, and in the exercise of my privilege, I stipulate that the duel shall take place in Lake Pontchartrain, in six feet of water, sledge hammers to be used as weapons."

M. Marigny was about five feet, eight inches in height, and his adversary was seven feet. The conceit of the Georgian so pleased M. Marigny, who could appreciate a joke as well as perpetrate one, that he declared himself satisfied, and the duel did not take place.

Some Queer Definitions.

Bailey's Universal Etymological Dictionary, with the subtitle, "An Interpreter of Hard Words," was first published in London in 1721. Most of its definitions are eccentric, and some of them incredibly so. Here are specimens plucked at random:

Man.—A creature endowed with reason.

Thunder.—A noise known by persons deaf.

Lightning.—A meteor.

A Rainbow.—A meteor of divers colors.

Weapon Salve.—A sort of ointment which is said to cure a wound by being applied to the sword or other weapon that made the wound.

Balloon.—A football; also a great ball with which noblemen and princes use to play.

Cow.—A beast well known.

Milk.—A food well known.

Peacock.—A fine bird.

Elephant.—The biggest, strongest and most intelligent of all four footed beasts.

Medlar.—A fruit which is grateful to the stomach, but is not ripe till it is ripe.

Snow.—A meteor well known in northerly and southerly climates, especially beyond the tropics.

Mouth.—Part of the body of a living creature.

Eye.—An instrument of sight.

Paderewski the Deceiver.

This is how a Kansas newspaper man criticised Paderewski:

"We heard the Poleander Paderewski play the piano in Convention hall, Kansas City. The fellow is deceitful. He makes you think all the time he is going to play a tune, but he never does. He flirts all around a tune, but never touches it. His hair looks like a wig, but it isn't. He deceives you in a hundred ways. He makes the sweetest sounds you ever heard that were not a tune. He has his piano so trained that the doggone thing will keep right on playing when he is not touching it. He reaches out slowly and strokes it, drawing back his elbows like a man brushing a girl's hair. You see the moonlight, and you're there with your girl, but somehow she doesn't love you. You know the sorrow of that, and that's why we don't like Paderewski. We wouldn't go to hear him again, but we wouldn't take $100 for what we heard at Convention hall."

To Hide It.

Hewitt—What are you raising whisks for?

Jewett—Well, I don't mind telling you that I am wearing a necktie my wife gave me.—Harper's Bazaar.

We are all inventors, each sailing out on a voyage of discovery, guided each by a private chart of which there is no duplicate. The world is all gates, all opportunities, strings of tension waiting to be struck.

Question Answered.

Yes August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers, and grandmothers, never thought of using anything else for indigestion or biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Sold by dealers in all civilized countries.

To The Deaf.

Cold Night In Canada.

The sky at night is a deep dark blue, and the stars are like dropping balls of fire, so close they seem to be almost within reach. The northern lights look as if a titanic paint brush had been dipped in phosphorescent flame and drawn in great, bold strokes across the heavens.

As you pass the electric lamps you see very fine particles of snow caught up by the wind and glittering high in the air like diamonds. But it is a cold night, and you are not sorry to get into your room.

First of all, you take a blanket or so from the bed, for there are people in Canada who sleep all the year round with only a sheet over them, to such a pitch of perfection have they brought the heating of their rooms.

After you have tucked yourself in the stillness of the night is broken occasionally by a report like a cannon.

Have you ever been inside a bathing machine when a mischievous boy threw a stone at it? And, if so, do you remember how you jumped? When the walls of a wooden house crack in the bitter cold, the effect is similar, only magnified.

But you know what it means here, so you only draw the clothes closer round you, thankful that you are snug and warm. And so good night.—Blackwood's.

When the excretory organs fail to carry off the waste material from the system, there is an abnormal accumulation of effete matter which poisons and clogs the blood, and it becomes sour and acid.

This poison is carried through the general circulation to all parts of the body, and upon reaching the skin surface there is a redness and eruption, and by certain peculiarities we recognize Eczema,

Tetter, Acne, Salt Rheum, Psoriasis, Erysipelas and many other skin troubles, more or less severe.

While the skin is the seat of irritation, the real disease is in the blood. Medicated lotions and powders may allay the itching and burning, but never cure, no matter how long and faithfully continued, and the condition is often aggravated and skin permanently injured by their use.
